Sexuality in the aftermath of breast and prostate cancer
Gendered experiences

Kicki Klaeson
The experience of sexuality in people with cancer diagnosis is a rather unexplored field. In this thesis the author describes sexuality from a lifeworld perspective in women with breast and men with prostate cancer. By conducting individual interviews combined with focus groups, the researcher tries to elucidate the unique and the collective experiences among these people. A gender based analyse is done in the summaries of the four different studies.

The author Kicki Klaeson, RN, MPH, is a practicing oncology nurse at the Department of Oncology, Surgical Clinic, Hospital in Lidköping, Sweden. In collaborating with professor Carina Berterö, Department of Medical and Health Sciences, Faculty of Health Sciences, Linköping University and Kerstin Sandell associate professor, Department for Gender Studies, Lund University, her research focusing on experiences of sexuality in people with breast and prostate cancer.